Architectural

The house contains many of its original features. The brick structure of the house was built in 1915 by John Robinson. The addition on the rear of the house was added about 20 years later and used as a wood and mud room (Fig 2). The addition has since been converted into a rec room. The roof line of the house is a 4-sided mansford which consists of no peaks. The soffit is decorated with brackets that are a common feature within the area (Fig 3). The foundation like many farm houses is the original fieldstone (Fig 1). Inside the house, many features are original. The dining room consists of a oak ceiling with a decorative design. The living room ceiling is also unique, featuring a very detailed, decorative tin ceiling. The original section of the house all consists of wainscoting and the trap door for water still exists in the floor boards.

Historical

The house was built in 1915 by John Robinson and his family. The Robinson family owned the property for 77 years. The Robinson family farmed the property until 1961. The property was then divided into 3 separate lots. The property which held the house was sold and the other two lots were kept within the family and were continuously farmed. The family then moved to the Third Line of Medonte where more farmland was bought. After 1961, the house stood on 25 acres of the original property; it was not farmed any longer. There is little historical significance to the property other than it was built along the county line and was one of the largest farmsteads in the early 1900's in the area.
